

Greetings

Greetings, and thank you for deciding to view this website. I am honored that you have made this decision. Hopefully, as you read below, you will find something completely different than any other political site or campaign you have seen before. That is certainly my expectation and intention because I believe it is time for the people of this nation to demand different.

First and foremost, I am NOT a candidate for ANY political office, nor is this site promoting a campaign for office. My name will never appear printed on any ballot. To do so would require adhering to rules and requirements designed to prevent someone like me from ever succeeding. However, under certain circumstances, I would be willing to serve in office. This site is designed to start a political movement. This is a movement that needs to be Of the People, by the People, and for the People. Should this movement succeed, I believe there is a way to legally and peacefully allow that service to occur.

My fellow American, please allow me to introduce myself. My name is John Kennedy Muntean, and, as you most likely heard from the message posted on social media, although I am NOT a member of the Kennedy family, my naming was completely intentional. From my birth, my parents hailed me as the 'Heir to Camelot' and expected me to grow into a leader for this nation. My parents never fully explained to me why, how or when this 'title' was to be realized, nor why they believed it was me, and I have lived a life to avoid it and those expectations. But the even bigger question(s) is this: How can you claim a title that doesn't even exist? And, if it DOES exist, then what does it MEAN? And why on EARTH would I claim it? I assure you, the answer to those questions have plagued me my entire life. Let's explore some ideas to answer those questions.

First of all, let's address the first and last of those questions. The claim that the title even exists is almost as outrageous as my making a claim to it. No rational person would invent it, and no rational person would believe it. I have always considered myself to be quite rational, and that's the main reason that it has taken me this long to accept the possibility that it is valid. The bottom line is this: I did not invent the title, and have no evidence to independently support my parents' claim. However, I do know that I was raised from birth with this claim, and that I am the only person on the planet that can truthfully say that. If there is no validity to the title or my claim to it, then this movement rightfully ends here. All that I know is that it is my responsibility and obligation to lay claim to it, and to present my ideas to help this nation, this 'American Experiment', avoid its destruction. Whether it fails or not, at least I will be able to look myself in the mirror and know that I offered my nation a pathway out of this mess. I have lived a life of relative obscurity. I can easily return to it.

As for the second question, what would the 'Heir' inherit? The Democrat Party? Absolutely not! I did grow up in a Democrat home and knew I was expected to be a Democrat. However, although I DID vote for Walter Mondale in the '84 election, I have not heard a Democrat say ANYTHING that I could support in over 50 years of paying attention. I cannot support a party that avoids adhering to the principles that founded this nation. Fortunately, JFK didn't either, and when he realized that, it cost him his life. So, perhaps the 'inheritance' was not his party, but his core beliefs and vision for this nation. Although he was far from a perfect man, let's examine some of those.

1. Peace is better than War. Although war is sometimes necessary and unavoidable, it MUST be the last option, and not the first choice. JFK met this challenge numerous times in his brief tenure and saw how our bureaucracy did not agree with that principle. From the assassination of Patrice Lumumba, the Bay of Pigs fiasco, the Cuban Missile Crisis, and to our involvement in Vietnam, the bureaucracy was at odds with this principle.
2. Secrecy is anathema to a free society. JFK felt that a legitimate government MUST be honest and open with its citizens. A people cannot be free unless they have informed consent with its government's actions.
3. Debt causes decisions. Whether the debt is financial or transactional, he knew that owing others causes a free person to make decisions they otherwise would not make. 'Free' means no dependencies.
4. All ideas are important. JFK believed that a free society needed all points of view to reach its full potential. Having the 'best and brightest' running the government was better than only one way of thinking. And he had no problem defending his position or listening to contrary ideas to come up with the best solution. Freedom to express ideas openly and without fear of reprisal is essential to a free society.

Now, THESE, among others, are core beliefs that I could, and already do, live by. They are also remarkably consistent with the values expressed in our nation's founding documents. If this is the mantle that I was expected to 'inherit', then I will gladly accept it. Unfortunately, standing up for those beliefs cost him dearly.

If you are still reading this, you have at least entertained with idle curiosity what on earth I think we should do. Typically, the process of offering something new and outrageous, especially for someone who is unknown, would be to write a book, get it published and then tour/promote this 'new' idea. Unfortunately, we do not have that much time, and I seriously doubt that a publisher would entertain the notion. Therefore, in keeping with the mantra of 'demand different,' I decided to flip the script. I am beginning with this webpage and a tour to promote my ideas. Eventually, I WILL write a book which will be about my tour, my plans, and my interactions with people along the way. The book will be titled:

'We, the People, Deserve Better', subtitled 'It is time we demand the government our Founding Fathers Promised Us.'

Should this movement succeed, I do not expect difficulties in finding a publisher...

So, how far away from these values are we today? This site will examine issues and my beliefs to show just how far away we have moved away from them.
